Mountain View Corridor Concepts Narrowed From More Than 300 to Eight

*Public Encouraged to Review Maps, Provide Input and
"Be Part of the Solution"*

Transportation experts have narrowed a list of more than 300 possible transportation concepts for the Mountain View Corridor (MVC) to eight - four in west Salt Lake County and four in northwest Utah County. Residents are encouraged to comment on these concepts by Aug. 31 via the project website at udot.utah.gov/mountainview.

"These concepts will be studied more over the next year, and the public is invited to comment now to allow time for the project team to address questions and concerns," said Teri Newell, project manager for the Utah Department of Transportation. "We encourage residents to discover how they may be affected and provide feedback."

Every potential MVC transportation solution includes transit, roadway and trail facilities. A multi-modal approach is important for providing travel choices in the future and for helping meet transportation demand, according to Newell.

Those without internet access may visit their local library to pick up the concept maps. Feedback may be provided by responding to questions on the project website (udot.utah.gov/mountainview) or by calling the project phone line at 1-800-596-2556.

Over the next 12 months, the MVC Environmental Impact Statement study team will continue to analyze the concepts and add details, like transit station and roadway interchange locations. A public hearing on the Draft EIS is planned for Fall 2005.
